The Journal of the Indian Institute of Science is published by the Institute since 1914. Its historic significance lies in the fact that it is the second scientific journal to be published from India. Since its origin, research work carried out by the Institute and other institutions around the world was accepted for publication in the journal.

The current format of the Journal was changed in 2007 to focus exclusively on invited reviews on specific themes, each issue being edited by an eminent researcher who serves as a Guest Editor. Since then, this Journal is a quarterly with large circulation in India and abroad. This Journal is the right medium to reach out to scientific and educational institutions, industrial R&D, corporate members, students, scientists, engineers, engineering college faculties, policy makers, project leaders in science and technology.

Each issue is a collector's item!
